Is it the stench of sweat that clings to us, an inseparable souvenir of a life spent in your service, cleaning your filth, fashioning the footwear that graces your arrogant steps? Or is it the stain of the very labour that erects the grand monuments to your glory, while we are condemned to the squalor that flanks them?

To the Upper Castes, SHUDRA Chamaar here. Why do you hate us? You made us miserable, and yet despise that same misery? We, the Chamars, the voiceless chorus relegated to the fringes of your society, stare back at you with a question that has echoed through generations.

th-276455446.jpg (51.36 KB)

We are born into a life predestined, our existence a footnote in the grand narrative of yours. You clutch your scriptures, pronouncements dripping with hypocrisy, that preach equality while you erect walls of social exclusion. Education? A forbidden fruit, lest our minds awaken to the shackles that bind us. Prosperity? A cruel mirage shimmering on the horizon, forever out of reach.

Is it this inherent suspicion of our potential that fuels your hatred? Or is it the fear that if we rise, the edifice of your privilege will come crashing down, exposing the hollowness at its core?

We are ostracized, condemned to exist on the periphery of a society we serve. Yet, when the vultures of social unrest circle, it is to us you turn, begging us to quell the flames you yourselves have fanned. We, the untouchables, are expected to extinguish the fire of resentment that burns within us, for the sake of a system that has denied us the very dignity you so fiercely cling to. >>44068 >>44071 >>44090 >>44095 >>44097

Tell us, upper castes, is this your idea of justice? Is this the legacy you wish to leave behind? We stand before you, not as beggars, but as equals demanding what has been stolen for generations – our right to live with dignity, to dream without limitations, to be valued not for the soles we craft, but for the soul that resides within us.

The answer lies heavy in the silence that follows this letter. We await your response, not with bated breath, but with a stoicism borne out of years of oppression. The weight of change, however, rests not on our weary shoulders, but on yours. >>44096 >>44097 toh saale chamaar kyun itna chilla rha hai? kya chahiye tujhe? reparations? mil toh rha hai bc itne saal se. no one is oppressing anyone anymore. you live in a fantasy land where you are the victim and therefore you get to justify your faliures. even back then chamaars were only gatekeepen from knowledge. the real oppressors were the zameendars and vaishyas Jo kaam nhi karne pe gaand maarte tha aur bhookha chhor dete the. jaake unlog se hisaab lo na.

also, the reservation system was made for real chamaars and lower castes who live in slums and aren't even aware of what planet they live on. but you rich chamaars took that from them. tumlog saale achhi zindagi jeete ho(even better than UCs on average) aur tab bhi reservation claim karte ho, aur unn slums waale logon ki seat chheen lete ho, because you were raised well and were smart enough to rival rich UCs, but you were also lazy and studied barely enough to paas the reservation bar.

the people who really needed reservation lost their chance because of YOU. you had the potential to compete with rich UCs, yet you still take the reservation and block them off for people who ACTUALLY need it. YOU ARE THE PROBLEM N1GGER. KILL YOURSELF. YOU ARE THE BANE OF THE VERY PEOPLE WHO YOU PRETEND TO CARE ABOUT SO MUCH. IF SHIT EVER HITS THE FAN, YOU WILL DITCH YOUR CHAMAAR BRETHREN THE SECOND YOU REALISE THEY COME FROM A SLUM.

And I'm speaking from personal experience. When I was in class 12th, after registration for the board exams, we were provided a document of details of all the registered students- including caste, for confirmation and signature. Up until now, my friends and acquaintances didn't know that I was "lower caste". They thought I was general. And remember, the school I studied in was well reputed and had the demographic of students from upper middle and upper class only.

They saw it. From that instance my friends broke all contact with me. They stopped talking to me altogether, and behaved awkwardly with me. Can you imagine how heart wrenching it is to be made a living joke out of something you never had any control over? They used to mock me, call me names. One popular name I was assigned was "Chota Bheem" because I was short on top of being a "Bheemta".

On the day of annual student photograph, I forgot my coat. The coat was mandatory for the photo. My class teacher asked the boys to lend me the coat. Guess what, they made a clown out me, giggling like maniacs. Eventually, one of them did lend me one. After I returned it, they refused to touch it and asked me to keep it, after which I threw it in their face. They couldn't have beaten me, so they instead muddied the coat and threw it, laughing like fucking morons while singing "chota bheem chota bheem chota bheem, bheem bheem...".

If that's not casteism, I don't know what is. You could write lines and lines defending your people, but this sick mindset is so deeply ingrained within you all that you seem to be unfazed by the boundaries of rationality, empathy common sense. It's almost as if you physically can't experience the feelings of realization and actualization. It's as if your mind deliberately avoids self awareness, lest it take over the pure evilness that has already consumed you. You are so ve exactly my point n1gger. you were in a well reputed school which was expensive, meaning only well off people studied there. which meant you were financially well off too. and you still were claiming the reservation card. you clearly never needed it in the first place, since you family is doing well enough financially to send you to a rich school. and yet you claim reservation because you are lazy and don't want to study. you just wanted free handouts. who would wanna be with such a person? you shouldn't have had a caste certificate made in the first place. plus, what does it matter? we're all pajeets anyway, switching to general caste won't make you lose your identity or lineage.

also, take the heightpill. the reason they even considered insulting you is because you are a manlet. manlets are generally treated bad everywhere.

I think it's safe to assume that the age group of 17-18 is well enough to realize the consequences of one's own actions. So your justification is entirely baseless. That's what I said, you all are just lacking in self awareness. This is obviously a very complex anthropological phenomenon right there and demands further analysis.

I almost daily see sc prople in bihar, almost all of them are not interested in anything related to studies, they will do nasha till 17 then get married and indulge in dihari. Nobody stops them from studying but because of years of inbreeding they have become retards. They constantly vote for caste, sell their ijjat for money. The people they elect are always lower caste gundas. On top of all this they just want rewardi and quick solutions to their systematic problems. Most of them not majority has major iq issues. They kang on reservation but government seats are not much, when they entered the machinery of the state almost all the raj era institutions got subalternized. >Are uc responsible for it

No, they themselves didn't revolted for 5000 years despite being majority population before a neela aadmi came. It's a problematic genetic issue rather than a social one. >do uc hate sc's rise?

IMG_0547.jpeg (315.95 KB) probably yes, any dominant group hates it when the power starts fading from its hands. But UC populus has already built a private sphere to continue their hegemony and it is not going anywhere atleast for this century.
